'She died in front of me'

Stabbing witnessed.
 Neighbours tried to

Winnipeg police confirmed Sunday morning they are investigating the city's 19th homicide.

Police said a woman was found in the 500 block of Furby Street around 5:30 a.m. Sunday with undetermined injuries. She later died.

A woman, living in a home across the street, said she was the first person on the scene.

The witness, who asked not to be named, said she was awoken around 5:30 a.m. to horrible screams.

"The guy came out of there and stabbed her in the stomach," said the woman, gesturing to the area around an apartment at 583 Furby St.

"I seen her hit the ground, so I knew that's what he did." He was yelling at her over money, she said.

The witness said she called 911 and then went outside to help. Together, with another man, she ran towards the woman as the assailant fled.

The pair performed CPR on the victim, who apparently "flatlined" but came back when resuscitated, she said.

The neighbour shook and stumbled backwards when told by a Metro reporter the victim had died.

"She was just a little thing," she said grimly. "That poor kid.... It's unbelievable."

"She died in front of me."

Police taped off a large scene around two mountain bikes lying in the street with 14 evidence markers surrounding them.

The witness said the bikes belonged to the victim, who she said was 20 years old, and her sister.

"I'm moving — I'm scared for my life. It's sick, just sick," she said.

Airship offers unusual Fringe experience

Airship
Femmes du Feu
Venue 13

The assorted ropes, bars, pulleys, chains — and oh yes, the giant net with the woman suspended in it — hanging from the ceiling of the theatre as the audience enters are a fair indication that we're in for an uncommon Fringe experience. And this new work from Toronto aerial dance company Femmes du Feu does not disappoint.

The quartet of dancer/acrobats takes us on board a steampunk-inspired airship powered by human movement. So that means the performers — as the airship's crew — climb up ropes, swing on ladders and spin on hoops to keep the airship aloft, as the voice of an unseen commander issues dire warnings.

Although it takes a little while for Airship to get off the ground, there are dazzling displays of aerial dance in a show that's sometimes sassy, sometimes goofy, sometimes sexy — but above all, tremendously fun. JOFF SCHMIDT

Bookworm
Big Sandwich Productions
Venue 10

It takes guts to get onto a bare-bones stage with nothing to support you but a pile of books and a water bottle. Corin Raymond pulls off his autobiographical tale, of a life lived deeply through books, with warmth and wit.

Bookworm is shaped by the opening to Ray Bradbury's novel Something Wicked This Way Comes. Imagine the two boys from this novel, William Hallowsay and Jim Nightshade, morphed into one lonely boy from Ontario. Living in a house full of books and failing at school, he grows up to be a singer/songwriter earning money for his next album by collecting Canadian Tire cash. Raymond's story is odd and inspiring.

A love letter to literature, see this show if you ever bought a book instead of groceries. Skillfully constructed and lovingly told, Bookworm is like finding your favourite nook in the library and curling up for an hour with a good friend who really gets you. MICHELLE PALANSKY

Surf Chimps
The Placeholder Show
Venue 7

Some Fringe plays are best seen after a few beers. This one seems to have been written after a few.

J.P. Renaud narrates as his comedy gang brings to life an alleged flick called Surf Chimps, which is rumoured to have been in production several times but never completed for mysterious reasons. Quinn Greene draws the short straw — he gets to wear the stifling-looking rubber chimp mask for the full hour. Bill Pats is the deranged "antagonist" — out to ruin Surf Chimp's fun — with grotesque graphic violence if necessary. Melanie Dahling is the benign all-American sweetheart child who becomes Surf Chimp's best buddy. The Surf Chimp cover-up is presented as a sort of mish-mashed multimedia mockumentary that investigates, but somewhat irritatingly fails to reveal, what happened to this fictional movie. CHRISTOPHER READ

Downtown Winnipeg's newest green space at the Millennium Library was officially opened Friday, with messages from dignitaries and the releasing of ladybugs into the park.

The reconstructed Millennium Library Park includes a plaza deck, urban wetland, prairie garden and two public artworks created through the Winnipeg Arts Council.

One is called "emptyful"

— an installation piece in the shape of a container, which stands at over 10 metres high and is made of stainless steel, lights, water and fog. The other is a work called "Sentinel of Truth," inspired by the library itself, which is a wall with text inscribed into it.

"You've got to come at night to see the lights and the fog," Mayor Sam Katz said about emptyful.

Katz added that the city's goal is to make the park, which is the only one between the legislative building grounds and Central Park, an active urban green space.

"We don't want people to walk through — this will be a destination," he said.

The Downtown BIZ plans to use the space for events like the Out to Lunch concert series, and yoga and zumba in the park.

Details emerge about Aurora theatre rampage suspect

Colorado. Holmes was neuroscience student who quit PhD in June

The suspect in the Colorado shooting rampage displayed behaviour that a gun-range owner thought was "bizarre," but it is still unclear if anyone at the university where he studied had any hint of his plans.

Police said James Holmes began buying guns at Denver-area stores nearly two months before Friday's shooting. He also received at least 50 packages in four months at his home and the University of Colorado, Denver that authorities are investigating to see whether they contained materials for the potentially deadly booby traps that police found in his apartment.

At the same time, the quiet 24-year-old was in the final weeks of the first year of a rigorous PhD neuroscience program, where he took a three-part final exam required for students to progress in the program and was scheduled to give a presentation on microRNA biomarkers before abruptly leaving in June.

Holmes is being held without bond on suspicion of multiple counts of first-degree murder after a shooting rampage minutes into a premiere of the new Batman film The Dark Knight Rises in Aurora early Friday that left 12 people dead and 58 injured.

He is scheduled for an initial court hearing Monday and has been assigned a public defender.

Amid the continuing investigation of Holmes and his background Sunday was a day for healing and remembrance in Aurora, with U.S. President Barack Obama arriving to visit with families of the victims and a vigil planned for later in the evening. Congregations across Colorado prayed for the shooting victims and their relatives.

Holmes was being held in solitary confinement at a Denver-area county detention facility and was not co-operating with authorities, Aurora police Chief Dan Oates said.

"He lawyered up. He's not talking to us," the chief said.

Authorities are working with FBI behavioural analysts and are looking into Holmes' relationships to find a motive, which could take months, Oates said.

The owner of a gun range said that Holmes applied to join the club last month but never became a member because of his behaviour and a "bizarre" message on his voice mail. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Norway pauses to mark anniversary of massacre

Norway on Sunday paused to commemorate the 77 victims of a bomb and gun massacre that shocked the peaceful nation one year ago, a tragedy that the prime minister said had brought Norwegians together in defence of democracy and tolerance.

In a wreath-laying ceremony at the bomb site, Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg said Anders Behring Breivik had failed in his declared goal of destroying Norway's commitment to being an inclusive, multicultural society.

"The bomb and the gun shots were meant to change Norway," Stoltenberg told a sombre crowd of a few hundred people at the ceremony. "The Norwegian people answered by embracing our values. The perpetrator lost. The people won."

Tarps still cover windows of bomb-damaged buildings on the plaza, and large cement road blocks stop all but pedestrian traffic. Mounted police and officers with bomb-sniffing dogs were on site Sunday, but the security was not overbearing, as if to show that Norway was still an open society.

Survivors and families of victims gathered for a private ceremony on the island.

Lindsey's Law. Index meant to help identify missing persons and unidentified remains won't draw on DNA Data Bank, thanks to government concerns

A national database to help identify missing persons and unidentified remains is more than a year away, but families and experts say that DNA is the missing piece of the puzzle that the initiative needs.

Judy Peterson has been a proponent of such a database since her daughter, Lindsey Jill Nicholls, went missing in 1993.

Peterson started a petition in 2003 called Lindsey's Law, calling for DNA from missing persons and unidentified remains to be added to the National DNA Data Bank, which was set up in 2000 to help police with their investigations.

Charest's future hangs in the balance

Effigies are hung in protest in Montreal on Sunday during a mass demonstration against the Quebec Liberal government's policies, including university fee hikes and Bill 78. Thousands of students and their supporters took to the streets to denounce the province's tuition increases, sending a message that they will be ready for a fight if Premier Jean Charest decides to call an election. Protests against Quebec's Liberal government have eased during the summer months, but student groups said yesterday's strong turnout during the height of the summer holidays was proof the movement hasn't died out. The crowd, an enthusiastic mix of students, families and seniors, made its way through the city's downtown on a hot and humid afternoon.

It lies in politics at the local level, where women on reserves have been taking the reins more and more often, she says.

Few celebrate third anniversary marking end of Great Recession

Global recovery. Three years on and trillions spent, economies still fragile in U.S. and Europe, while Canada's progress is deceiving Few are noting the occasion, but about now Canada and the rest of the world should be celebrating the third anniversary marking the end of the Great Recession.

It was in the third quarter of 2009 — the July-September months — that Canada and many other major advanced nations began to breathe a little easier in the knowledge they had peered into the economic abyss and somehow survived.

Yet there are no signs of re-joining, or even relief.

At separate stock-taking events last week, U.S. Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke, Bank of Canada gov-

Aiming for average

On a per-capita basis, Canadians are still not back to where they were before the 2008-09 crisis.

- Per-capita GDP in inflation-adjusted dollars peaked at $40,015.79 in the fourth quarter of 2007, and had only returned to $39,648.11 in the first quarter this year.

ernor Mark Carney and the International Monetary Fund each had different versions of the same message — the global economy still hangs by a thread, growth is painfully slow and full employment is years away.

Europe is suffering through a Japan-style lost decade.

Canadians have been told repeatedly they have done better than most, and the message has become the reality.

France's L'Express magazine last week declared Canada "number 1" in a cover story, encouraging readers to pack up and head to the promised land.

The reality is a little more nuanced, though Canada looks awfully good next to much of Europe, which is now expected to be in recession the rest of the year.

But even in Canada, things might have turned out better. The first full year of recovery saw the output expand by an acceptable 3.2 per cent, but slow to 2.4 per cent in 2011. Depending on the forecast, it will likely slow further to between 1.5 and 2.1 per cent this year.

And that's gross domestic product, which includes population growth of about 1.2 per cent a year. Take away the fact there are more people in the country producing and spending, and the picture looks very different.

Lab working on security shoe

A new lab at Carnegie Mellon University is working on shoe insoles that monitor access to high-security areas, like nuclear power plants. The idea is based on research showing that people have unique feet and ways of walking. Sensors in the footpad collect data and check the patterns. One expert says the technology could raise privacy questions. Attorney Lee Tien with the Electronic Frontier Foundation says it's a potential tracking device.

Canadian TV viewers to get packaging flexibility

Canadian viewers frustrated with paying for television channels they don't want can expect more flexible packages in light of a new ruling by broadcast regulators.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has ruled in favour of proposals made by Bell Media and Telus Corp.

to adopt a more flexible TV-package model.

"In this decision, one of our main criteria was flexibility and innovation in the packaging," said Denis Carmel, a spokesman for the CRTC.

Carmel said that while individual channels may cost more under the new model, consumers' bills may go down because they will be paying for fewer channels.

The CRTC could not provide details about the terms of the agreement, which is confidential.

The ruling reflects a marketplace that is moving towards more flexible packaging, where consumers only have to pay for what they want, said Carmel.

"In the old days there were huge packages where to get one channel you might have to pay for many more," said Carmel.

Kevin Crull, president of Bell Media, called the decision a victory for consumers.

"The CRTC has sent a very clear signal that it supports carriage arrangements that will deliver more packaging flexibility to consumers," said Crull.

"With this decision, Canada will maintain its position as a world leader in providing consumers with both a wide array of programming choices as well as packaging flexibility, all at affordable rates."

Ford. Parts company's woes caused recall: Documents

A manufacturing problem at a company that makes fuel lines forced Ford to recall thousands of its brand-new Escape small SUVs and tell owners to stop driving them right away.

Ford Motor Co. announced the recall Thursday, saying there was a risk of an engine fire.

In documents filed by Ford and posted Friday on the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's website, the company said fuel lines were "mechanically scored" or damaged on the outside during manufacturing. The lines, made by a TI Group Automotive Systems plant in Indiana, can split when pushed over a connector fitting, and leaking fuel could ignite.

The recall involved 11,500 Escapes. About 4,800 have been sold to customers; the rest are still on dealer lots.

Escape

This was the second recall of the new Escape in less than a week.

- Ford is also recalling more than 10,000 Escapes to fix carpet padding that could interfere with braking.

Ford urged customers in the U.S. and Canada not to drive the SUVs and to contact dealers. The problem affects only 2013 Escapes equipped with 1.6-litre, four-cylinder engines.

The problem was discovered June 9 when a newly built Escape caught fire while a Ford worker was driving it from the Louisville Assembly Plant in Kentucky to a holding lot for shipping, the documents said.

Eurozone. Germany saves billions as safe haven for investors amid crisis

Germany has emerged as one of the biggest beneficiaries of the European financial crisis.

The bond markets have demanded that countries such as Italy and Spain pay prohibitively high borrowing costs to sell their debt amid worries over their sluggish economies and creaking government finances. Such high interest rates will burden these countries' state coffers for years to come.

Financially healthy Germany, meanwhile, has secured billions of euros in debt at record-low — sometimes negative — interest rates.

StatsCan. Inflation rate rises to 1.5% in June, consumer prices stable Canada's annual inflation rate rose slightly to 1.5 per cent last month, but most consumer prices stayed well in check and there were few signs of building-cost pressures in any region of the country.

Statistics Canada said increases in the price of passenger vehicles, electricity, food, and homeowners' replacement costs were mostly responsible for June's slightly higher rate, which was up three-tenths of a point from May.

Economists had actually projected an even greater uptick given May's extremely low reading of 1.2 per cent.

But they also cautioned that most of the increase would be temporary, caused by unusual base-effects from a year earlier when gas prices were receding and auto dealers launched an aggressive program of discounting. The agency noted that discounting occurred this June as well — with car prices 2.7 per cent lower than they were a month earlier — but less so than a year earlier.

As well, gasoline prices continued to trend downwards this June by 3.2 per cent from May, but not as sharply as last year at this time.

SAM KATZ FOR MAYOR

URBAN

about his leadership.

Listening to this, I said to myself, "This guy should be the mayor of Winnipeg."

There are two big problems with that scenario: The first, of course, is that Katz is already the mayor. And in that role he hasn't exactly carved out a reputation for handling things the way he did in that interview. The second is that the topic of the interview wasn't Katz's work at city hall, but his other job, as owner and president of the Winnipeg Goldeyes.

Now I can't blame Katz for being more enthusiastic about running a baseball team than running a city. The majority of the population would probably feel the same way. Council meetings aren't nearly as much fun as ball games, and there are no mini-doughnuts.

Customer service

"Katz the mayor
could learn from Katz who the guys are on the field, how the team is doing in the standings or even what league it plays in (the American Association).

They're not really there for the baseball, but because they get good value for their dollar. The park is nice, the food is good, the promotions are fun, and the staff are friendly and helpful. Spending an afternoon at the ballpark is enjoyable, whether the team wins or loses.

Contrast that with the experience of your average resident of Winnipeg.

Recent surveys have shown that Winnipeggers aren't terribly happy with the quality of city services, and who could blame them? The streets are in bad shape, bike lanes are left unpainted, stoplights are everywhere, registering a child for a recreation program feels like a survival competition, and it takes two weeks of a sustained heat wave to get the city to leave the water on a little longer at its spray pads.

Then just the other day, the mayor shrugged off criticism that it took seven years to renovate the small park behind the downtown library, suggesting that critics were just being pessimistic. If only he had fought half as hard to build Millennium Library Park as he did to build Shaw Park, then maybe there would be some reason for optimism.

I think most residents of Winnipeg know that we're never going to be in the big league of world cities — battling against New York, London, Toronto, Vancouver — but we do expect to get decent customer service and value for our money.

So let's hope that Katz the mayor can learn to start playing ball a lot more like Katz the owner, and instill a different culture at city hall.

London weather threatens itsy-bitsy bikinis

Two piece or not two piece: That is the question.

Chilly weather and even-ting matches at the London Olympics may force a cover up in beach volleyball — from bikinis to long johns.

"We need it to keep our muscles warm," Australian competitor Tamsin Hinchley said Sunday. "It's an extremely strenuous sport."

Yes, but let's get real. Long sleeves and leggings aren't exactly the main draw for lots of beach volleyball fans.

Asked if she thought it would be a turnoff for some fans, Hinchley said no, she thought the atmosphere would still be rocking at Horse Guards Parade.

And the gear has already been a common sight on the world beach volleyball tour this year. It's now part of the uniform, Hinchley said.

"Obviously we're that sport, we're the sport that wears the bikinis and we're the sport that's physically out there," she said. "But we're jumping and running and sliding on the sand. We'll be using it (cold-weather gear) to benefit us physically. We'll definitely be taking it."

The 20-year itch

Unwilling to start collecting dust in the seat crack of pop music, a spate of bands whose heydays are a couple decades in the rear view are back with a vengeance. Hollaback No Doubt, Garbage, Cranberries, and I Mother Earth, and, not to be left out of the fold, The Backstreet Boys, are once again back in the spotlight.

MIKE DOJC
scene@metronews.ca

Backstreet Boys

Heyday: 1996-2000

Kevin, AJ, Brian, Howie, and Nick are back alright...but are they still everything you need? While the aging heartthrobs released a pair of albums in Kevin's absence, '07s Unbreakable and '09s This Is Us, the band's core audience has been inconsolable since the oft-goateed member left. The reunion kicks off August 31 with a free concert in Central Park. A new album and a full-scale tour set for spring of next year is also in the works. Fans who can't wait that long to get their fix of returning singer Kevin Richardson can hunt down a pair of indie flicks he starred in this year: The Casserole Club, a wife-swapping drama set in the 1960s, and The Bloody Indulgent, a vampire musical.

Signature Songs: I Want it That Way, Show me the Meaning, As Long as You Love Me

The Cranberries

Heyday: 1993-1999

This Limerick-Ireland-based quartet hadn't released a studio album since 2001, and fans were missing their lush and lilting brand of poignant sonic dreamscapes. Seamlessly alternating between sweet "di, do-do doo" lullabies and more attitudinally tart fare, the Cranberries are at their best when they temper their melodic sweetness with notes of sour anguish. The band sticks to their knitting on 2012's Roses, re-teaming with their original producer Stephen Street to recapture their magic. During their downtime, singer Dolores O'Riordan dropped a pair of solo albums and lead guitarist Noel Hogan delved into electronica starting up Monoband, which spun into the side project's current incarnation, Arkitekt. Since reconvening, the Cranberries have been busy busting out tunes on the road and will be on a European swing this coming fall with stops from Bucharest to Barcelona and many points between.

Signature Songs: Dreams, Linger, Zombie

Garbage

Heyday: 1995-2001

With a name that gives a wry wink at the disposable nature of pop music, Garbage, assembled by Butch Vig (the super producer behind Nirvana's Nevermind), and a couple of his rock-vet pals, was originally a side project. Tapping Angelfish singer Shirley Manson to front the band made them one of the decade's steamiest acts. After seven years of hibernation following the underrated Bleed Like Me, Garbage returned with the nostalgia-mining Not Your Kind of People. Garbage's new material recycles the post-Grunge underpinnings of their self-titled debut and melds it with the spit-shined polish of their sophomore release Version 2.0 to create a vital new sound. During their self-imposed exile pouty-lipped Manson stole scenes as a chilly yet sexy liquid metal Terminator in FOX's The Sarah Connor Chronicles while Vig earned himself a Grammy producing Green Day's 21st Century Breakdown.

Signature Songs: Only Happy When It Rains, Stupid Girl, I Think I'm Paranoid

I Mother Earth

Heyday: 1993-1999

After an eight-year layoff since disbanding in the aftermath of 2003's The Quicksilver Meat Dream, IME was resurrected when they took the stage at Toronto's Sound Academy this past March for a pair of sold out shows. Bryan Byrnes, who took over from Edwin on 1999's Blue Green Orange, is back behind the mic and the Tanna brothers Christian and Jagori unleashing the band's beefy sonic onslaught on drums and guitar while Bruce Gordon checks back in on bass. The new single We Got the Love is a hard rocking, high-wattage pick-me-up that stands up to the band's most loved hits and longtime fans are lapping it up. With fellow mid-90s Canadian alt-rock radio regulars Treble Charger and Tea Party also recently getting their acts back together we smell a formidable triple bill in the near future.

Signature Songs: Levitate, One More Astronaut, Another Sunday

No Doubt

Heyday: 1992-2001

Ska-revivalists No Doubt rocked steady throughout the 1990s but haven't jammed on new material in over a decade. Settle Down, the first single of their upcoming album Push and Shove, is a bouncy tour de force produced by Diplo (Beyoncé, M.I.A.) charged by waves of Caribbean dancehall and frontwoman Gwen Stefani's infectiously perky pop-vocals. Since they've been gone the platinum blonde singer has released a pair of well-received solo albums, started a couple of fashion labels in L.A.M.B. and Harajuku Lovers, and gave birth to her two sons Kingston and Zuma. Bottle blonde bassist Tony Kanal also kept busy producing and laying down tracks with the likes of Pink and Weezer.

Signature Songs: Just a Girl, Don't Speak, Hey Baby

Ricky Martin. Singer loving the Broadway life

Ricky Martin says Broadway is a monster that requires discipline, concentration and dedication, but Evita's Che is feeling so happy and so at home that he can't imagine moving for a while. In an interview at the Marriott Marquis Hotel in Times Square, New York, which houses the musical based on the life of Argentina's first lady Eva Peron, Martin said he's never been challenged as much as in the Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber spectacle and that this is, precisely, what has him "hooked" on Broadway, where he debuted in 1996 as Marius in Les Misérables. Martin has already decided to stay in the Big Apple at least for a while, calling it a "fascinating" and multicul-tural city for his soon-to-be twins, Matteo and Valentino.

You were born for the stage and certainly for one on Broadway. Any immediate plans to work on other musicals or plays after Evita?

I love being onstage. I love what's happening with Evita. The reaction that I get every night from the audience, the emotions, the feeling, what I'm feeling every night onstage is, is simply beautiful. It's never the same, you never get bored, it's very challenging. Do I want to come back to Broadway?

I would love to do Broadway the rest of my life! Because it's challenging, because it makes me grow as an actor, as an entertainer, as an artist, and that's what I need, that's what I'm hooked on.

Would you consider staying here in New York?

I AM staying here in New York! Those are my plans. Anything can change in show business, you know how it goes, everything changes from one day to the other. But my idea is to stay here for a while.

Studios silent on box office brags

A Warner Bros. executive emailed a fact sheet about The Dark Knight Rises to Hollywood reporters a few days ago and ended with two hopeful syllables for the film's box-office prospects: "Ka ching." Cash registers have indeed been ringing at theatres worldwide this weekend as millions shell out for the finale to Christopher Nolan's epic Batman trilogy. But the shootings that left 12 dead and 58 wounded at a Dark Knight Rises screening in Colorado on Friday have silenced the usual box-office crowing by studios to let the world know they've unleashed another blockbuster. Warner, the studio behind the Batman flicks, decided to hold off on releasing debut numbers for The Dark Knight Rises this weekend out of respect to the shooting victims and their families. Other studios followed suit, saying that like Warner, they would not issue their usual Sunday estimates, waiting instead until Monday, when they normally release final dollar counts for the weekend. There's no doubt that The Dark Knight Rises will be the No. 1 film in America and beyond. Before Warner opted against weekend box-office reporting, the studio announced that the film took in $30.6 million domestically from shows that started just after midnight Friday.

Her husband donated sperm

Families. ...to a lesbian couple, and that's fine by her, says one mom

Alana's husband had never donated sperm before. Although the mother of three had contemplated egg donation from time-to-time, her husband had never considered the opportunity to help a family in need, both before their marriage and after.

But when the couple's friends Jennie and Susan watched yet another sperm donor fall through, Alana and her husband decided to present them with an offer.

Two years ago after Alana welcomed her third child, Jennie and Susan were approaching the year mark of a struggle to get pregnant. Many legal barriers prevented the aspiring mommies from even getting married, let alone becoming parents — a predicament that deeply touched both Alana and her husband.

After consulting a lawyer on waiving all parental rights, the couple approached Jennie and Susan with the chance to use "their" sperm.

"They were surprised and grateful because the area where we lived is very conservative and most of our mutual friends were either neutral to their struggle or privately against it," Alana remembers.

The ladies didn't just hop at any sperm sample though.

Quoted

"An anonymous sperm donor had never appealed to the couple and the idea of reaching out to friends with similar values greatly interested them."

One lesbian couple accepts a sperm donation from a family friend. THINKSTOCK

Only after some questioning about her husband's health and family medical history — which included no major genetic diseases — did the two mommies green light the idea. An anonymous sperm donor had never appealed to the couple and the idea of reaching out to friends who shared similar values greatly interested them. A sparkling family medical history and Alana's three healthy children ultimately had the two women consenting to expand their family with her husband's sperm.

She describes Jennie and her partner as being "very open" to both Alana and her family having limited involvement with the hypothetical child, hashing out potential visits and the routine sending of photos.

The "crunchy, natural lifestyle" ladies were adamant about attempting a more "organic" method for conception before going the IVF route. Upon removing heterosexual sex from the table, the soon-to-be mommies decided on at-home insemination and asked Alana's husband to deposit a sperm sample in a sterile cup at their home. Within the next hour, the couple used a sterile medical syringe, similar to what is used with infants, inside Susan. Although the couple was prepared to go through five rounds of at-home insemination before trying more conventional approaches, the mothers conceived on their second round — a rarity for their preferred method. Susan and Jennie eventually welcomed a baby girl.

"Jennie and Susan are two of the most loving, awesome people we have ever met and if anyone deserved to be mothers it was them. My husband and I both feel honoured and touched that we could be a part of helping them realize their dream of being parents," Alana tells Mommyish. "But in the end they are her mommies and my husband and I are just family friends."

First peanuts, now eggs

Doctors have reversed allergies in some children and teens by giving them tiny daily doses of problem foods, gradually training their immune systems to accept them.

In the best test of this yet, about a dozen kids were able to overcome allergies to eggs, one of the most ubiquitous foods, lurking in everything from pasta and veggie burgers to mayonnaise and even marshmallows. Some of the same doctors used a similar approach on several kids with peanut allergies a few years ago.

Don't try this yourself, though. It takes special products, a year or more and close supervision because severe reactions remain a risk, say doctors involved in the study, published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"This experimental therapy can safely be done only by properly trained physicians," says a statement from Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, the federal agency that sponsored the study.

It didn't work for everyone, and some dropped out of the study because of allergic reactions. But the results "really do show there is promise for future treatment" and should be tested now in a wider group of kids, said the study's leader, Dr. A. Wesley Burks, pediatrics chief at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Training a child's immune system to tolerate even small amounts of egg to prevent a major reaction was the study's goal. It enrolled 55 children ages five to 18. Forty were given

Whooping cough rising

The U.S. appears to be headed for its worst year for whooping cough in more than five decades, with the number of cases rising at an epidemic rate that experts say may reflect a problem with the effectiveness of the vaccine.

Nearly 18,000 cases have been reported so far — more than twice the number seen at this point last year, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Thursday. At this pace, the number for the entire year will be the highest since 1959, when 40,000 illnesses were reported.

Nine children have died, and health officials called on adults — especially pregnant women and those who spend time around children — to get a booster shot as soon as possible.

Whooping cough has generally been increasing for years, but this year's spike is startling. Health investigators are trying to figure out what's going on, and theories include better detection and reporting of cases, some sort of evolution in the bacteria that cause the illness, or shortcomings in the vaccine.

Canadian gelato on top

What does it take for a Canadian to beat out a host of artisans from around the world in the land where Gelato reigns king?

Some Quebec maple syrup, California pecans (toasted and infused with Maldon sea salt, as well as caramelized) and a whole lot of moxy.

Luckily, James Coleridge has all three.

The Ottawa-born gelato maker, whose Vancouver shop Bella Gelateria regularly has lineups out the door at its sole location, got word this month that he's won two of the coveted top prizes at the Gelato Festival in Florence, Italy.

The competition is the world's largest for gelato makers and Coleridge beat out 29 Italians for the top prize.

"I consider myself a custodian of an old-world process," says Coleridge, who admits he "jumped around like a jellybean for about a half hour" when he heard the news that he'd won both the technical jury prize and the People's Choice awards.

Being an artisanal gelato maker is about more than the all-natural ingredients that go into the process, Coleridge says. He uses his Italian training, skill, artistry and dedication to whip up fresh small batches of his Gelato creations (that range from Tahitian Vanilla to the award-winning Noce Pecan e Sciroppo d'Acero Canadese – Pecan and Canadian Maple Syrup) from original recipes that can take as long as 45 days to perfect.

Still, he says there are plenty of ways you can enjoy gelato at home.

"Gelato is best eaten fresh and not stored in a freezer for much time," he cautions.

Another tip: "Serve it using a tablespoon, never an ice cream scoop! (Scoops) are an ice cream thing," says Coleridge who is clear, "Gelato is not ice cream. We don't use their paraphernalia."

Find the perfect gelato

Here are Coleridge's three tips for finding the best gelato.

- Flavours. Stay away from flavours that are too reminiscent of ice cream (Cookies and Cream and Bubble Gum, for example) but consider opening your palate to flavours that aren't exclusively Italian like Akbar Mashti (saffron, rosewater) and Black Sesame.
- Close your eyes. Pretty syrups and gummy bears have no place in a good artisanal gelato. If they have to sell it to you by what it looks like, it probably doesn't have much taste.
- Watch for windows. Beware big, open air serving windows. Gelato is sensitive. Even one ice crystal can wreak havoc on its taste. Artisanal makers make small batches by hand and seal them tight against the freezers in which they are stored.

Your humanities degree may soon become ancient history

BRUCE WALSH

Metro World News in Philadelphia

Toby Miller's latest book is his most confrontational, polemic piece of writing to date. In Blow Up the Humanities — which will be released by Temple University Press in August — the longtime author and media studies professor skewers his own field, painting humanities departments as antiquated relics with an overtly class-conscious agenda.

Computer languages or ancient languages, which to study? PROVIDED

"It used to be that you couldn't get into Yale unless you were proficient in ancient Greek. The idea was that they would produce 'cultivated gentlemen who would be leaders of the country.'"

Eventually they dropped classical languages as the core and turned toward English literature and so on," says Miller, who is the chair of the media and cultural studies program at the University of California, Riverside.

"At the same time the big land-grant universities were looking for a much more applied form of humanities. ... That's why if you go to the University of Michigan or Illinois, you learn speech communication — but if you go to Yale or Harvard, you learn English literature."

Pointing to a downward trend in student engagement, research and publication opportunities, Miller proposes a decidedly practical curriculum focused on the job skills most students need.

"Whether you work in PR or Metro, Greenpeace or Coca-Cola, you need to know how to design a webpage, the basics of narrative art, how software and hardware work and the conditions of labour in those areas," says Miller.

"I'm looking for something that's very applied, in the way business is, but also has a critical edge, dealing with questions of labour and the environment, and not just how you can make a buck and become a corporate boss."

PGA. Australian Adam Scott bogeys final four holes while Els finds something special Ernie Els felt something special could happen at the British Open, and it did.

All because of a collapse by Adam Scott that no one imagined.

of his meltdown began to sink in.

Els, who started the final round six shots behind, finished off a flawless back nine with a 15-foot birdie putt for a 2-under 68 that looked as if it would do little more than lock up another runner-up finish at Royal Lytham and St. Annes. Instead, he wound up with his second British Open — the other one was 10 years ago at Muirfield — and fourth major championship.

"Amazing," Els said. "I'm still numb. It still hasn't set in. It will probably take quite a few days because I haven't been in this position for 10 years, obviously. So it's just crazy, crazy, crazy getting here."

The celebration was muted, unlike his other three majors.

"First of all, I feel for Adam Scott. He's a great friend of mine," Els said. "Obviously, we both wanted to win very badly. But you know, that's the nature of the beast. That's why we're out here. You win, you lose. It was my time for some reason."

Scott said: "I had it in my hands with four to go. I managed to hit a poor shot on each of the closing four holes. Look, I played so beautifully for most of the week. I shouldn't let this bring me down."

"I can't justify anything that I've done out there. I didn't finish the tournament well today. But next time — I'm sure there will be a next time, and I can do a better job of it."

Tour de France. Wiggins blazes trail for British cycling

Twenty-three years ago, Bradley Wiggins marvelled as Greg LeMond blazed a trail as America's first Tour de France winner. Now, he has blazed his own.

The 32-year-old from gritty northwest London became Britain's first winner of cycling's greatest race on Sunday, ending a 75-year drought for his country with an imperial conquest of the roads in France.

Wiggins had locked up the yellow jersey a day earlier by winning the final time-trial and Sunday's ride onto the Champs-Élysées was largely ceremonial for him.

But putting the coveted shirt to work one last time, he added a touch of class by providing a lead out to Sky teammate and fellow Briton Mark Cavendish to get his third Tour stage victory — the 23rd of his career — in a sprint. The Isle of Man native is a main contender to win road-race gold at the Olympics in London, which has been a hovering presence over the peloton in this Tour.

"Cheers, have a safe journey home, don't get too drunk," he quipped.

"It's been a magical couple of weeks for the team and for British cycling," Wiggins said. "Some dreams come true. My mother over there ... her son has won the Tour de France."

Toronto (48-47) posted a season high for runs and climbed out of the AL East cellar, moving a half-game ahead of the Red Sox (48-48). The Blue Jays matched their season high with 18 hits.

Castroneves gets breakthrough in Edmonton

After four years of frustration, Helio Castroneves finally broke through Sunday and won the Edmonton Indy.

The Brazilian racer beat frontrunner Alex Tagliani out of the final pit stop, took the lead, and held off Japan's Takuma Sato by less than a second for the checkered flag at the City Centre Airport.

Will Power, Castroneves' Penske teammate, was third, 5.4 seconds off the pace.

For Castroneves, it was a big weight off his shoulders in the Alberta capital.

He had finished second three times in the last four races in Edmonton. In 2010 he took the checkered flag only to be stripped of the win for blocking Power.

"It's my second win here — but today it counts," said the 37-year-old from Sao Paulo.

Weightlifting. Medal contender Girard inspired by Canada's former strong-women

The heaviest thing on Christine Girard's shoulders at the Olympics may be the legacy left by the Canadian female weightlifters that came before her.

But it's not a burden that slows her down. It only adds extra inspiration for London.

Girard, who grew up in Rouyn-Noranda, Que., is thinking particularly of Maryse Turcotte, who competed for Canada in the 2000 and 2004 Summer Olympics and won gold in two Commonwealth Games and one Pan American Games before she retired.

"I have enormous respect for Maryse and for what she did," Girard said from White Rock, B.C., where she trains and lives with her husband and coach Walter Bailey. "She was one of the first to stand out at the international level.

"Maryse showed what it's possible to do, she dared to do it. I want to do the same thing and hope to push things further in the future."

Girard hopes to add to the history in London, where she will compete in the 63-kilogram event on July 31. If she makes the podium, she'll be the first Canadian woman to get an Olympic medal in that discipline.

The 27-year-old, who was born in Elliot Lake, Ont., is not discouraged by incidents of doping within her sport.

"They have their reasons and I know this is not always their choice as an athlete," she said of those who cheat. "My goal is to show that if you work hard you can beat the others. Maybe it takes more years of training to get to that point — for me, it's 17 years — but I honestly think it's possible."

Girard is on her way to proving her point. She lifted 135 kilograms in the clean-and-jerk in training earlier this year — tying the Olympic record — and recently hoisted 136 kilograms.

"I've spent years testing that every month," she said. "If I'm capable of doing that in training, then others can too."

Girard, who was fourth at the Beijing Games, holds the record in the snatch and in total weight in her class at the Commonwealth Games — 60 kilograms — and the Pan American Games (63 kilograms).

Track-and-field. U.S.-born athletes make up most of Haiti's small Olympic squad

Four of Haiti's five Olympians at the London Games have something in common — they're not from Haiti.

With millions of Haitians living on $2 a day or less and hundreds of thousands of people rendered homeless by a devastating earthquake two years ago, the country struggles to produce world-class athletes. But those with Haitian links are eager to represent the small Caribbean country.

"I still feel Haitian even if I wasn't born there," 21-year-old sprinter Marlena Wesh said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

Wesh, who will run the 200 and 400 metres at the Olympics, grew up in Virginia but her parents are from Haiti.

Besides having family ties to Haiti, the four foreign-born Olympians will be competing in track-and-field, including a former roommate of Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg.

He hopes to eventually form a non-profit group called the Jump for Haiti Foundation, a sports program to produce future Olympic athletes from the country. Laine said he plans to call on his friends, including his roommate-turned-billionaire, to donate a few dollars.
